Amidst muted domestic demand, CPI inflation in China decelerated further to 0.7% in Mar'23 (est. 1%) from 1% in Feb'23. PPI deflation too quickened to -2.5% compared with -1.4% in Feb'23. Elsewhere, in line with expectations Bank of Korea kept policy rates unchanged for the second consecutive meeting. However, monetary policy stance was kept restrictive as inflation remains above target. It also stated that GDP growth is likely to be lower than its projection of 1.6% in CY23. In his first comments since assuming office, BoJ Governor supported the central bank's ultra-dovish monetary policy.

- Except Shanghai Comp, global stocks ended higher. FTSE rose the most followed by Nikkei. Markets are eyeing inflation data releases in major economies for cues on future trajectory of rates. In China, CPI came in below expectation. In US, CPI is expected to inch up by 0.2% on MoM basis. CME Fed watch tool shows a probability of 71% for 25bps rate hike. Apart from this, BoJ Governor's dovish comments also impacted market sentiments. Sensex closed flat. It is trading higher today, while other Asian stocks are trading mixed

- Global yields closed mixed. US 10Y yield rose by 3bps as market is now pricing a 71% probability for a 25bps rate hike in the next policy. UK, Germany, Japan and China's 10Y yield closed stable, in absence of fresh cues. After today's softening CPI print in China, more stimulus may be forthcoming to spur demand which might impact China's yield in coming days. India's 10Y yield rose by 2bps (7.22%), tracking US yield. It is trading at 7.24% today.
