Fed Chair's commentary and subdued Q2CY22 GDP print of the US reaffirmed investors view that aggressive monetary tightening cycle will ease off going forward. Subdued data print (US GDP, jobless claims and corporate earnings) pulled global yields lower. Tracking the dip, US$ declined and moved closer to the 6-week low mark. Oil prices continued to edge higher over supply concerns and focus shifted towards the next OPEC meeting scheduled next week.

- Barring FTSE (flat) and Hang Seng (lower), other global indices ended higher. Expected rate hike by Fed along with speculation of slower pace of future rate hike cheered investors. Amongst other indices, Sensex rallied to a 3-month high rubbing off the upbeat mood from the global market, along with slower pace of selling by FIIs in the current month. IT, real estate and banking stocks gained the most. It is trading higher today while other Asian stocks are trading mixed.

- Barring Japan, other global yields closed lower. 10Y yields in Germany (12bps), US (11bps) and UK (9bps) fell the most. Weaker than expected US GDP print (-0.9% in Q2 versus est.: +0.5%) and rising jobless claims increased fears of a global growth slowdown. Fed is also expected to be less hawkish now. India's 10Y yield fell only a tad by 1bps, as oil prices maintain pressure. However, following global cues, it is trading lower today at 7.28%.
